In Singapore 2121 there will be no more pesky working class or middle class to require constant oppression, thus effecting an elitist utopia. Singapore 2121 will have comfortably replaced the lower and middle classes with robots and computers that do not demand high wages or healthcare (or political reform) and so the business and government elites live in a luxurious paradise.

But in Marshall's vision, by 2121 a car-free Oxford has become a far happier city. Plymouth is a centre for Luddites; an outlier in a world in which to be green is to be normal. In Wolverhampton, blue-collar workers are now green-collar workers who live in the city with the cleanest air on the planet: all fanciful, all unlikely, all possible.
